Highlights

Information in Public Documents

Romania's score on the Open Budget Index shows that the government provides the public with substantial information on the central government's budget and financial activities during the course of the budget year. This gives citizens tools to hold government accountable for its management of the public's money.

The Open Budget Index 2008 evaluates the quantity and type of information that governments make available to their publics in the seven key budget documents that should be issued during the budget year. One of the most important documents is the executive's budget proposal. It should contain the executive's plans for the upcoming year along with the cost of the proposed activities. The proposal should be available to the public and to the legislature prior to being finalized, at least three months before the start of the budget year to allow for sufficient review and public debate.

In Romania, the proposal provides substantial information to the public, meaning citizens have a somewhat comprehensive picture of the government's plans for taxing and spending for the upcoming year.

However, it is difficult to track spending, revenue collection and borrowing during the year. Romania produces in-year reports, but it does not publish them. It does not publish a mid-year review, either. Publishing these documents would greatly strengthen public accountability, since it would provide a more thorough update on how the budget is being implemented during the year.

It is also somewhat difficult to assess budget performance in Romania once the budget year is over. A year-end report is produced, allowing comparisons between what was budgeted and what was actually spent and collected. However, Romania does not make its audit report public and does not provide any information on whether the audit report's recommendations are successfully implemented.

Access to the highly detailed budget information needed to understand the government's progress in undertaking a specific project or activity remains somewhat limited. Romania has codified the right to access government information through the Law of Free Access to Information 544/2001, and citizens are generally able to enjoy this right in practice, though it can be difficult to attain non-financial information related to expenditures.

Public Participation and Institutions of Accountability

Beyond improving access to key budget documents, there are other ways in which Romania's budget process could be made more open.

Opportunities for citizen participation in budget debates could be increased. For example, the legislature does not hold hearings on the individual budgets of central government administrative units in which testimony from the public is heard.

Notably, Romania's Supreme Audit Institution enjoys complete independence in determining its audit program. It also maintains formal mechanisms of communication with the public to receive complaints and suggestions.

Open Budget Index 2008

Romania

The Open Budget Index evaluates the quantity and type of information available to the public in a country's budget documents. A country's placement within a performance category was determined by averaging the response to 91 questions on the Open Budget Questionnaire related to information contained in the eight key budget documents that all countries should make available to the public.

Research to complete the Open Budget Questionnaire was undertaken by:
